Game-changing new course for Aussie sports officials

Australian Government Australian Sports Commission

A free, online course will help Aussie sporting officials build their knowledge, competence, and confidence in the biggest change to officiating in over two decades.

The Australian Sports Commission (ASC) has unveiled a modern approach to officiating to better support the one million referees, umpires and officials, that are critical to the sports we love.

The vast majority of officiating roles are filled by volunteers who are unpaid but gain a range of other benefits from their involvement in sport.

The new approach was developed in collaboration with more than 40 sports and replaces the outdated Community Officiating – General Principles Course. Like the Modern Approach to Coaching, which was successfully launched in 2022, this new officiating course focuses on the participants and their individual needs, aspirations and motivations.

ASC CEO Kieren Perkins OAM says the move away from a one-size fits all approach aims to ensure sport is a place for people of all ages, backgrounds, genders and abilities. “Our community referees and umpires play a crucial role in sport and can have an immense impact on the environment in which people play and are involved,” Perkins said. “This modern approach supports the development, education and training of officials, empowering them to create safe, inclusive and enjoyable sporting environments where everyone can thrive.

At a time when sports are facing increasing challenges recruiting and retaining officials, these new resources address the importance of protecting the mental wellbeing of officials and increasing pathways into the sector.

Trailblazing international cricket umpire Claire Polosak is encouraging those interested in officiating to give the new course a go.

“It’s a rewarding and challenging job that sets you up with transferrable skills for the future. Every day is different, as an official you’re always learning and get to meet a range of different people.” Polosak said. “I would absolutely recommend completing this course. It will help officials improve the experience for everyone in the game.”

Take the free online Community Officiating Essential Skills Course and learn more about the modern approach to officiating online at <https://www.ausport.gov.au/officiating/education/essential-skills>.

Ways to grow your super and reduce tax

AustralianSuper

EOFY tax time tips

Read the PDS and TMD at australiansuper.com

Extra payments made before the end of the financial year could help you save on tax and grow your super balance over time, thanks to compounding investment returns. Here are three ways to help grow your super and reduce tax:

1. Salary sacrifice contributions
Also known as concessional contributions, this is when you add to your super from your before-tax pay, which could reduce the amount of income tax you pay. This is in addition to the 11% superannuation guarantee (SG) your employer pays into your account and any additional contributions made by your employer. The SG will increase to 11.5% on 1 July 2024.

2. Tax-deductible super contributions

This is when you pay extra amounts directly into your super account. You may be eligible to claim a tax deduction on these contributions when you do your tax return.

3. Spouse contributions

These are payments to the super of a spouse or de-facto partner. This can be a good way to reduce tax at the end of the financial year while helping to grow your partner's super. Learn more about how to save on tax and help grow your super

Government super co-contribution available

If your yearly total income is less than $58,445, you could be eligible for a super co-contribution payment of up to $500 when you make an after-tax contribution to your super.

The government will match up to 50 cents for every dollar you contribute to your super from your after-tax pay. The contribution is paid directly into your super account after you've lodged your tax return for that year, as long as your super fund has your tax file number. Learn more about eligibility.
